

Anil Menon is the Vice President for Marketing Strategy and Worldwide Market Management at IBM. His responsibilities include the development and implementation of IBM's brand strategy, product naming, and brand licensing. He is also responsible for IBM corporate identity and all of IBM's industrial design. Dr. Menon also oversees IBM's worldwide market and competitive intelligence, which includes market research, competitive intelligence, forecasting, customer satisfaction measurement, and marketing communications research. He is responsible for a small marketing consulting team, which drives marketing and customer thinking throughout IBM. Dr. Menon joined IBM in January 2002 and is a member of IBM's Senior Leadership Group and the Global Marketing Board. Prior to joining IBM, Dr. Menon was on the marketing faculty at Emory University's Roberto C. Goizueta Business School, Atlanta, USA. He was Sony Fellow in Business Strategy with the Sony Corporation. He also served on the Executive Committee of the Strategic Planning Institute, an international business think tank which originated at the Harvard Business School. Dr. Menon is a trustee of the Marketing Science Institute and on the board of the Zyman Institute for Brand Strategy at Emory University.